CAMPAIGN WILL OPEN

With Millions of Posters Illustrated by the Leading Artists.

NINE MILLION PREPARED

Other Millions of Stickers, Stamps, and Liberty Loan Buttons to Be Used.

Throughout the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, Porto Rico, Cuba, the Philippines and "Somewhere in France" some nine million posters are daily reaching the hands of various Liberty Loan committees for distribution as the first big step in the coming Third Liberty Loan campaign. The drawings are contributions of artists of many schools and sections ranging from a night school student to the most widely known illustrators. Work on the posters was begun early in January, and every government facility employed to expedite their completion. Paper, coal and other necessary agencies in their production were all obtained with the special effort required at this time.

With the enthusiasm artists necessarily bring to their work, those contributors to the Liberty Loan have expressed in almost every conceivable form the ideals of the patriot. Three of the designs, by Raleigh, Pennell and Paus, were donated through the Sub-Committee on Pictorial Publicity of the Committee on Public Information, of which Charles Dana Gibson is chairman. All the designs used were furnished without charge to the Treasury Department.

One of the most powerful posters is by Joseph Pennell, the renowned Philadelphia marine artist. Executed with the strength of line characteristic of an etching, a great battleship in dock is the imposing subject of the picture. Airplane circles over the scene about the dock is one of the great activities. The whole constitutes a pictorial recognition of the nation's aerial and naval forces. Pennell's own caption for the poster "Provide the Sins of War" is particularly fitting. In order that there might be no mistake made in the reproduction of the drawing, Pennell went to New York and personally executed the work.

"Over the Top," one of the most popular slogans of the day, is well conceived in Sydney Riesenberg's spirited painting. "Over the Top for You." It promises to be one of the most popular posters of the campaign. In addition to imbuing the soldier figure with unusual virility, Riesenberg has succeeded in putting much action into inanimate parts of the painting, particularly the flag, which the soldier carries. The flag, filled with the brisk wind, is silhouetted against the intense blackness that immediately precedes the dawn.

"Halt the Hun" is the powerful exhortation standing forth in red lettering on a poster drawn by Henry Raleigh. The poster shows an American soldier forcing back a brutal figure wearing an iron cross, at whose feet cowers a woman clutching a child. All the figures are in black crayon set against a buff background streaked with flames of lurid red.

Howard Chandler Christy has contributed a stirring poster. A modernized spirit of victory bearing an American flag challenges the patriotism of the country for support of the advancing columns of American soldiers in the background. Art critics declare that Christy has risen to new heights in endowing this painting with the spirit of freedom and victory. One million posters of this design, in eight colors and two sizes, have been lithographed for general distribution.

An attractively executed design and a clever caption are combined in a poster, "Are you 100 per cent American?" by Sydney S. Stern. It writes that he attended various evening schools of art, including the "New York Evening School of Industrial Art."

Exact reproductions of the famous Liberty Bell and Independence Hall in Philadelphia are shown in the "Ring It Again" poster. It is lithographed in eight colors and depicts an enthusiastic throng surrounding Independence Hall while the Liberty Bell rings out its message of freedom and democracy. The Liberty Bell has proven such a strong emblem in previous campaigns that it is being used more extensively in publicity work for the coming campaign than ever before.

The soldier, asleep behind the lines and dreaming of victory with his comrades is depicted in a twenty-four sheet poster. The figure of a sleeping soldier is in khaki color and occupies the lower part of the poster, forming a vivid contrast to the cold greenish representation of No Man's Land in the background. He dreams of victory, and high above him he and his comrades are depicted as marching home, joyously bearing ing the laurels that they have won in the trenches. The entire poster is full of life and action and well represents the fitting realization of a soldier's desire. This poster will be displayed on 8,500 billboards throughout the country. In the other soldier poster, entitled "To Make the World a Decent Place to Live In," by Herbert Paus, the dark figures of the soldiers in the act of going over the top are silhouetted against a lurid sky, giving the composition striking contrast and action.

In recognition of the sale of more than $100,000,000 worth of Liberty Bonds last October by the Boy Scouts of America and their intention to cooperate in the Third Liberty Loan campaign, a special poster has been produced for them by the Treasury Department through the courtesy of J. C. Leyendecker and the Saturday Evening Post. A million of the posters, in eight colors, showing a Scout kneeling before an heroic figure of liberty, will be distributed by Scouts throughout the country.

In addition to the 9,000,000 posters, there have been prepared for distribution 5,000,000 window stickers, 50,000,000 poster stamps, and 16,000,000 Third Liberty Loan buttons.

COLLEGE BOYS TAKE UP AX

Athletes of University of Colorado Will Cut Wood During Week-End Vacations.

Boulder, Colo.—Athletes of the University of Colorado here, who are not caught in the next army draft, will shoulder an ax instead of a musket, and go into the forests of the Rocky Mountain national preserves during holidays and week-end vacations to cut wood. This will be brought to Boulder and shipped to Denver and other cities as fuel, to take the place of coal.

The college boys have agreed to donate at least 20 per cent of their ax and saw earnings to the Red Cross.

Accidents will happen, but the best regulated families keep Dr. Thomas' Eclectic Oil for such emergencies. Two sizes, 50c and 60c, at all stores.—Advertisement.

A PHOTO PROPOSAL

By E. COLSON.

(Copyright, 1915, Western Newspaper Union.)

Old Mr. Brewer believed himself to be acting in a manner more broad and liberal-minded indeed when he told Philip Mainstone that he might call on his daughter Gertrude as often as he liked, provided he spoke or wrote no word of love to the young woman. This embargo was to last until Gertrude, who had just passed her eighteenth birthday, was twenty.

It was delightful to see Gertrude as often as he liked, certainly, especially after the long weeks in which he had wondered how much longer he would be considered a welcome guest at the Brewer mansion, but he soon found that the permission to see her often meant far less than it had appeared to do at first sight. He was not the only young man who saw her frequently, to begin with. Gertrude was a pretty girl, bright and popular in the bargain; Philip began to live in a chronic state of fear lest some other fellow, wise enough to speak to the girl first and then the father afterward, should step in ahead of him. The girl herself did not seem, to his excited fancy, to take nearly so much interest in his attentions as she had done heretofore. Sometimes he was on the point of throwing up the whole thing for a year or two and going West. All of which was precisely what Mrs. Brewer had counted upon when she had consulted her husband to make terms.

After a time, however, Philip became so deadly tired of waiting that he gave up the idea of going West and decided to change his tactics entirely. He had promised to write or speak no word of love to Gertrude, certainly, but proposing had never been mentioned. Surely it was possible to make a proposal of marriage without uttering love-sick speeches! Yes, he would certainly propose, and that as soon as the opportunity offered.

But the opportunity was long in coming. Mrs. Brewer had a "nose for news" which would have made the fortune of a metropolitan newspaper reporter, and while she did not exactly suspect Philip of endeavoring to break his compact, so she gave her husband to understand, still she meant him to have no temptation of that order. Never a moment alone with Gertrude could he find or obtain. Even when they went upon photographing expeditions together—both being enthusiastic photographic amateurs—they were invariably accompanied by Gertrude's brother Benjamin, a spoiled youth of fourteen, his mother's darling, and also badly afflicted with the picture-taking craze. And yet it was through a photographic process that Philip finally carried out his will in regard to his innamorata and circumvented her mother's care.

The bright idea occurred to him one Sunday afternoon, as he worked over his newest lens, and he lost no time in trying it. Carefully printing a certain legend upon a transparent white paper, he pinned the paper up against the windowpane and went over it again more boldly and on the wrong side, with a charcoal crayon. Then he attached the paper, still wrong side outward, to the wall and photographed the legend—backward. This he did because characters of this kind photographed in the ordinary way, are always reversed in the negative. It is only in the printing that matters become straight again, and it was in the negative that Philip was particularly interested.

He carried it with him when he called upon Gertrude the following evening. Gertrude ran upstairs to her own little darkroom to develop the plate immediately. Philip had explained that he thought she would understand the new experiment he wanted to share with her more clearly if she developed the negative.

"Metrol-hydrol I suggest as a developer," Philip had told her as she ran upstairs with the plate-holder containing the "experimental" negative, and this agent she had accordingly prepared. She rocked the little tray back and forth for two or three minutes, then exposed it to the rays of the red lamp. And this was the message:

"My dearest girl: Will you marry me? Philip Mainstone."

The girl grew white and pink as she read it. Then she laughed merrily and sat down to consider. Ten minutes later she went down to the parlor and explained that she had broken the precious negative.

Philip colored hotly, and Mrs. Brewer, pitying his fancied disappointment over the lost negative, took Gertrude gently to task.

"I don't see how you could be so careless, my daughter," she remonstrated. "Nobody knows how much trouble Mr. Mainstone may have taken to secure the negative you have destroyed. Can't you make it up to him in some way?"

"I don't know, mamie," answered Gertrude, smiling and blushing adorably as she turned her face away from her mother and toward Philip. "I don't know. I shouldn't care to repeat the experiment myself, even if I knew how to do so, which I do not. But we might possibly present him with some other work of art, if you think best. Suppose we try."

A sudden thought made her cheeks burn yet more brilliantly, and she took from the mantel a small plaster figure of the conventionalized "Chicago," and offered it to Philip. And whether by accident or design, again it would be difficult to say—her small forefinger pointed to the inscription, "I will!"
